Then the head of the delegation spoke of what was happening in Sudan of plans to tear it apart and to remove Islam from it through what is called 'The National Dialogue', which was launched because of orders from the US. It was prepared and finessed in the United States Institute of Peace, and the dialogue was continued through the two American delegates who sought to the inspection of all of the Dialogue's committees, after they had finished their work. The Dialogue comes in its present state, so that it can be said that it is the demand of the Sudanese people, this happens when the political force is engaged in it.

In the meeting, they agreed that the movement (Thabo Mbeki) is not safe for the country's issues and that (Mbeki) is carrying out the agenda of the American Administration. The meeting also touched upon what is happening in the Muslim parts of the world and the world in a general manner and that there are indicators that big changes will occur for the whole Muslim Ummah – Inshallah; this will happen through the establishment of a state that is based upon Islam, that unites the Ummah and that makes it capable of ruling the world.

At the end of the meeting, the participants emphasized the importance of meeting with the political force and the intellectual in the country to discuss far away from the Dialogue which the government insists on its continuation so that it can realize the plans of the foreign and Western forces. It should be an honest dialogue between the people of the country, founded upon the great Islamic principles, that guards the country's unity and that prevents the outrageous foreign intervention from foreign forces that desire the country and wealth.
